

Schematic illustration of ocean surface topography as the difference between the mean sea surface and the geoid. In the Northern Hemisphere, geostrophic currents flow clockwise around the highs of the ocean surface topography and counter-clockwise around the lows. The flow directions, caused by the Earth rotation, are reversed in the Southern Hemisphere.